

Quit Tea Now Available At Whole Foods Market North Atlantic Stores Helping Smokers Quit Naturally

A natural and alternative product to help smokers to kick the habit.

LOS ANGELES - Oct 18, 2012 --- Quit Tea, a new product that has already helped hundreds of smokers replace the habit of smoking for good, is now available at Whole Foods Market stores in the North Atlantic region.

According to Quit Tea spokesperson Matt Bucklin, "Over the past few years, an increasing number of studies have shown traditional smoking cessation aids are not effective, driving smokers in search of natural and alternative ways to beat the habit. Whole Foods Market, the industry leader in natural and organic products, is known for providing consumers with the best products for a healthy lifestyle."

Whole Foods' North Atlantic region includes stores in Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and central Connecticut. Quit Tea is located in the grocery department with the other teas.

"Whole Foods Market is leading the path in providing consumers with new healthy options," added Bucklin. "Since 2008, the average number of monthly searches on Google for the term 'quit smoking naturally' has almost doubled. One possible reason is the increase in advertising for non-traditional ways to quit smoking like hypnosis, cold laser therapy, acupuncture, and others - but one other factor in this trend is that smokers are tired of trying the same few products over and over again, without success."

Quit Tea is a simple blend of herbs and spices that is intended to help smokers replace the habit of smoking with drinking herbal tea. The herbs help relieve stress and promote relaxation to temporarily support the willpower to give up smoking. Quit Tea is unique, all-natural, and effective. It has been on the market since May, 2010, and since then over 125,000 smokers have already tried a sample.
